Youth Futures, a collaborative effort co-taught with a county Extension agent, operated in 22 Wisconsin communities between 1991-1998 when Bogenschneider served as director. Each community site included five to eight formal meetings in which Extension specialists and county agents met with a local coalition to develop a comprehensive plan for preventing potentially problematic youth behaviors. The process included the presentation of six lectures on a risk-focused, ecological approach to prevention; adolescent development; characteristics of effective prevention programs; and prevention programs that have been successfully implemented in other Wisconsin communities. At last count, 30 policies/programs were enacted/developed as a result of this program.

24 presentations to community groups in Niagara (Marinette County), Omro (Winnebago County), Bloomington (Grant County), and Rhinelander (Oneida County) for 720 coalition members.

12 workshops for Youth Futures local coordinators and coalition members, including 4 all-day trainings for 327 participants.

One all-day statewide in-service for 30 county Extension agents, several of whom facilitated local coalitions.
